

If I couldn't have the freedom of choice for my internet provider while still paying my phone company for the use of the DSL, it would cause me great hardship as I use electronic filing of tax returns for my clients. If I had to change providers, it would be difficult as I use my e-mail address for my professional organizations. What would happen to the rates if the phone companies had an exclusive for internet service?